failed haiku

A Journal of English Senryu
Volume 4, Issue 41

Kala Ramesh
Guest ‘Failed’ Editor
www.failedhaiku.com @SenryuJournal on Twitter Facebook Page

Sunrise
And Before the Word Came the Adjective

haiga by Mark Gilbert
Thank you!
Kala Ramesh!

Poet, editor, anthologist and festival director, Kala Ramesh’s book of haiku and haibun ‘beyond the horizon beyond’ was a finalist for the Rabindranath Tagore Literary Prize 2019 and received a certificate for 'excellent contribution to literature'. Kala’s initiatives culminated in founding ‘INhaiku' to bring Indian haiku poets under one umbrella in 2013.
Cast List

In order of appearance (all work copyrighted by the authors)

Vandana Parashar
Helen Buckingham
Tracy Davidson
Roberta Beach Jacobson
Charles Trumbull
Lew Watts/Charles Trumbull
Charles Trumbull/Lew Watts
Anna Cates
Nancy Shires
Bryan Rickert
Elaine Wilburt
Keitha Keyes
Raamesh Gowri Raghavan
Pris Campbell
T. W. Wiszniewski
Debbie Strange
Bruce England
John Hawkhead
Angelescu Sorin
Chen-ou Liu
Bob Whitmire
Richard Grahn
Bisshie
Rp Verlaine
Bob Moyer
Kathryn Stevens
Carol Raisfeld
Kath Abela Wilson
Mark Miller
Vidya S Venkatramani
Jim Krotzman
Nicholas Mathisen
Agus Maulana Sunjaya
Theresa Okafor
Madhuri Pillai
Ayeyemi, Taofeek Aswagaawy
Martha Magenta
Richa Sharma
Christiane Ranieri
Bruce H. Feingold
Robert Witmer
Roger Watson
John J. Han
Debbi Antebi
William Keckler
Ben Moeller-Gaa
Jo Balistreri
Jackie Maugh Robinson
Ivan Gaćina
Mark Gilbert
robyn brooks
Darrell Petska
Sondra J. Byrnes
Claire Vogel Camargo
pregnancy report
my dad's face flushed with my happiness

receding hairline ...
wondering how far he should apply face cream

suave doctor
I toss the apple in dustbin

traffic jam
is there a subway
to your heart

Vandana Parashar
ICU

do you

end of a hard day I soak back into myself

Helen Buckingham
old photographs
all the faces scored out on my father's side

year's end
the fat man in the suit audits my taxes

she makes planes
from paper...
my missing manuscript

wildlife themed birthday cake he finds out the wasp isn't marzipan

Tracy Davidson
origami crane more of a duck opposing political parties - hornet's nest

autumn cruise this ocean or that so where is the rest of your poem

he asks

Roberta Beach Jacobson
still trying to get a grip on chaos theory

To 5-7-5 or not to 5-7-5
that is the question

Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi:
watch his death live
on CNN!

Charles Trumbull
Teletubbies

Dr. Phil reruns
I definitely prefer the soft centers

    Super Bowl touchdown run the instant replay ... again

Mother's Day ... watching The Handmaid’s Tale with a spayed cat

Arab spring:
there’s a bomb in Gilead film at eleven

    cuticle soak
    glued to Bước nhảy hoàn vũ

Mercy, mercy!
I nod off watching Little Mosque on the Prairie

Lew Watts
Charles Trumbull
barely civil, he asks:
“who's been sleeping in my bed?”
grumbling thunder

still the little boy who lives down the lane

dog's deposition:
what Old Lady Hubbard really did to him

old man's bone...
playing knick-knack
on his knee

he's a teapot short and stout here's his handle, here's his spout morning after slugs and snails and puppy dog tails in the sheets

Charles Trumbull
Lew Watts
theatrical ...
an angel's broken halo

her lopsided haircut . . .
I silently count
with the teller

Anna Cates
a jumble of unidentified keys stuck where we are

mom’s old house
throwing away
the key

telling the age of a turtle by the bullet in its shell

Nancy Shires
museum garden
pigeons leave their mark on the modern art

The Great War
grandfather recalling how great it wasn’t family holiday in the kitchen mom prepares for the worst

closing time
empty bottles
empty faces

Bryan Rickert
spilled so many words, so fast — one glass of wine

Elaine Wilburt
dining alone
with an iPhone as a shield no-one bothers me

drip, drip ...
Trump’s America
down the drain

Keitha Keyes
yellowing slowly
all those letters marked return to sender

avoiding traffic
the back alleys of a self I've never explored

martyrs column
... the names to be etched still unborn

graveyard shift the nodding taxi driver keeps me awake

burnt letters
but you still live in the cinders

French fries
my sore throat looks with longing

Raamesh Gowri Raghavan
bright orange hair the nursing staff applauds her hundredth

Sail Away

He wanders down to the dock where we’ve tied up for two days in Little Adventure to more easily do our laundry and stock up on supplies before sailing further south. His eyes are filled with longing. ’I wish I could do what you’re doing,’ he says.

‘You can’, we tell him, but he’s already listing the reasons he’s tethered to shore - his mortgage, his kids can’t travel in a boat... he’s never gone sailing with his wife. Maybe she won’t like it. Too many reasons to remember. We’ve seen men like him all down the coast, men longing to fill their lives with adventure, but won’t try. Men who will likely stay rooted in sameness until weeds grow around their feet.

He comes the next day for one last look at his future disappearing before him, then heads with his briefcase to work. We cast off at dusk.

turn around —
a shooting star lights the horizon
sunrise...
the sweet celebration of newlyweds

Pris Campbell
my daughter's handshake... the potential
in that grip

T. W. Wiszniewski
Twitter URL: https://twitter.com/tomxwinte pill box the many colours of mood disorders heart cockleshell as empty as my own hegira . . .
the home
we never Knew

Debbie Strange
My thirteen year-old: when will I be thirteen at the ticket window?

Bruce England
inside a crow’s wing

the death of everything goes unnoticed

sunday morning

saturday night trash

she spits me out talking back again

he loosens the belt

she gave him

John Hawkhead
continental drift - my daughter says
I can't possibly understand her food poisoning -
all of my problems I've decided to eat riding lesson - my father teaches me how to walk on heels

Angelescu Sorin
second-hand Apocalypse the passages
highlighted in red

ESL class
my Chinese tongue tangled and untangled

Chen-ou Liu
Poetry in the Moment Tweeter: @ericcoliu and @storyhaikutanka texting, shooting the gap between two trucks-Tobin Bridge, Boston

more left unsaid than said flickering candlelight

Bob Whitmire
tired of reading the book of stars opens

Stuart Bartow
the moon
and me
already half gone

Lee Felty
unlearned school anthem we waited for the chorus

offertory time
the beggar moves closer to the street preacher

waiting for her
under the streetlamp
I rehearse with my shadow

Adjei Agyei-Baah
second date
she flirts
with the idea

in the mirror
a small chuckle
about it all

Elmedin Kadric
her accent
a bit posher -- tea with the Queen

nothing left to the imagination
the nude beach

rock band practicing in the basement -- the dog’s accompaniment

all our eggs in one basket -- wi-fi password

belle of the ball -- the alarm clock ends
that dream

ecology conference --
plastic name badges

Angela Terry
Between Power Lines

caught between power lines the story the spider was weaving Angela Terry

her glow at his humble words Julie Warther the song that he wrote for her now topping the charts Angela Terry she sings along with the mourning dove... alone again Julie Warther only shadows where once their future was bright Angela Terry under the maple what’s left of the nest Julie Warther

Angela Terry
Julie Warther
two for the Seesaw - twenty-five years of marriage

Capotă Daniela Lăcramioara after divorce –
I share the world with my loneliness

Capotă Daniela Lăcrămioara

Capotă Daniela Lăcrămioara
Flyby

We argue over whose empire was bigger, which regime the most benign. I always play the Trafalgar Trump card; you always retort that our naval hero (not even an admiral) paid for victory with his life. The debate inevitably turns to the height of the Corsican corporal. It all depends on the origin of the measuring implement.

hanging high Napoleon’s portrait
over Nelson

On the long journey, you mention a visit to the Chateaux d’If, copy of Dumas in your backpack. Tunnelling through the airport crowds, you’ll soon be free from this loneliness.

Tim Gardiner
morning fog
dad tells the hospice nurse he had a good night

snowbound
reading stories to the cat by candlelight

emphysema
grandma listens to the birds chirp

Barbara Tate
A Quiet Place-silence wondering
how it got made

Dan Smith
Good Friday
leaving work a full ten minutes early

Michael Henry Lee
A Week Before Pay Day

Dad steals from our piggy banks. Well, if we are around he asks if he can “borrow” some money. If we aren’t around he just takes it. I know, I keep track of every quarter, dime and nickel. My sister is young and she doesn’t know what he uses it for. I know it will buy him a six-pack and maybe a pack or two of Camel cigarettes. Sometimes he pays us back. Most times he doesn’t. My piggy bank is stuffed with IOU’s.

heads or tails
the flip of a coin reveals his fate

Terri L. French
bumper sticker says “proud parent of honor roll child” enters through exit

Michael Feil
www.michaelfeilarts.com
Nesting Dolls

In my third week, near the end of my shift, I remove the rubber band from my hair to fluff it with my hands. The odor of the children’s hospital has permeated every pore so I can no longer smell it. A final bed check and I am free. I enter his room and see him lying in his giant crib, a threadbare blanket his only cover. I get close to assure he is breathing and, fast as a lightning strike, he reaches between the bars and grabs my hair, planting a feces smear along twelve inches of my mane. He releases his grip and giggles.

In the bathroom, I turn on the hot and cold water and grab the Ivory soap, dunking my head under the faucet as I move the bar around my long hair. Suddenly, I freeze. I part the hair in front of my face and I look the nurse in the eye. “May I borrow your scissors? I need a haircut.”

the space between tragedy and comedy
nesting dolls

Marilyn Ashbaugh
almost home

almost home
through an open window unfamiliar accents

almost home
last car in the station restrooms locked

almost home
a stray cat hurdles
the rusted gate

almost home
two girls laugh: pause:
adjust their hemlines

almost home
darkened potholes
filling with rain

almost home
Spanish curses,
then laughter
almost home
the lovers hasten to separate

almost home
counting his pocket change and whistling
What Remains

I have been teaching college courses for more than twenty years. I have taught thousands of students. Almost all completed my class successfully. Some excelled. A few, of course, failed. And most have slipped now into anonymity—I have probably walked past members of each group with no recognition, on my part or on theirs. The ones who stick with me the most are the three who never finished their incompletes.

The first was a quiet boy with a Russian accent. He spoke haltingly of the counseling he was receiving for his depression, filled out the paperwork for his incomplete contract, and disappeared.

Another was dealing with health problems: her own undiagnosed ailment during her semester in my class, then her mother’s diagnosis with Stage 4 cancer while she was working on her incomplete. Eventually she told me of other family problems compounding her struggles. We extended the deadline for her incomplete as long as we reasonably could.

The last was an exemplary student who spoke of the burden of expectations, of the teachers who saw her as a “golden child.” Her parents were going through a protracted, hate-filled divorce while living in the same house. My student was hospitalized with an eating disorder; then her father was diagnosed with terminal cancer. My class was the only one left to finish to complete her degree. The door has closed for all of them. The uncertain “I” on each of their transcripts has been replaced with an unambiguous “F.”

But there is no door closed so tight it cannot be pried open. When the bureaucracy of academia runs out of forms, there are still letters of appeal to be written. My three students have moved on, I know, but they remain my incompletes.

dried lentil
dust
on my fingertips

Mark Forrester
family night
the wine reddens
our faces

Dad's old bike leaning against the wall for a junk dealer

David He Zhuanglang
listening to rain
I drift toward sleep end of recording

Louise Marlowe
I empty closets of the people I’ve been downsizing

dehthbed
she slips in and out of prayer

a glimpse of the past torn wallpaper

Words

Age, of course, was part of it, I said as we stood together. He nodded, listened as I talked and then stepped outside, leaving me alone. He walked in a circle, first one way and then the other. He stopped sometimes and looked up, all the while talking quietly. For some reason, all this comforted me.

the arborist
talks to the tree
about its problems

Gregory Longenecker
pigeons
on the pier tourist season

red light
aging bikers rev up their engines

held up by road construction the funeral procession

my shadow practices qigong
while I watch

Sheila Sondik
This Round's on Me

When his roommate broke my toddler's tricycle, I restrained myself. When he dropped my toddler on his head, I restrained myself. But when he drank a collector's bottle of fine wine I had hidden in my wine cabinet, I lost it!

even sober
I know when I've had enough

——

Murder on His Mind

With two full paper grocery bags in my arms, I dash across the busy highway in the pouring rain to my car. My nephew, the practical joker, locks the doors. Cars, trucks, and busses whiz past me at 60 miles an hour just inches away nearly giving me a heart attack. As the grocery bags wilt, my rain-soaked hair drips down my face, and my drenched clothes stick to my skin, my nephew, having had a great laugh at my expense, finally unlocks the doors.

thank you!
I say with a straight face plotting my revenge Sorry, I Must Have Misdialed

My new girlfriend warns me to stay away from the San Francisco Saloon—it's a pickup joint, she says. She reviews my reading list, removing several books that might give me bad ideas, such as Anna Karenina, Portnoy's Complaint, and Lolita. She makes a long list on lined, yellow, legal-sized paper of all the things, as the new matriarch, she forbids my mother to do in my home. She cleanses my closet of all the clothes she claims she would not see me dead in. She complains that the new car her estranged father agrees to buy her is not good enough. When I tell her the car is fine and she should be grateful, she sticks her face right up in mine, and growls, if you think the car is so fine, you take it and give me yours!

She asks if I have any questions.

in a hurry
I grind the gears shifting into reverse

Michael H. Lester
twitter: @mhlester synchronized
the midday clamor of muezzin and church bells fine sounding word with just the right meaning – urban dictionary checked thrift –

the onerous task of turning his collars

from the depths of the subway a violin soars fierce concentration the twist and turn of fighting kites

multi-tasking
drawn inexorably to subtitles
city remains -- the color of war is gray

Ingrid Baluchi
dad’s transistor radio constant static
between us

cemetery walk
a dog plays
dead

dark alley my imagination
kills me

Rich Schilling
snowman nearly half a bagel smile spring tryouts

the little league coach sings nessun dorma

our breath almost in sync first dance

Bill Cooper
jigsaw puzzle -
you complete
me

blue moon . . .
the highlights
in her hair

Valentina Ranaldi-Adams bowing in prayer
a more common ritual bowing before androids

Vishnu Kapoor
whizzing downhill hands off handlebars fifty years late

Message in a Bottle

Aye, just fifteen, I was, when we moved from the Lancashire cotton and colliery town of my birth. And the last thing I did was bury a message in a bottle under my dad’s shed.

Back now after fifty years and more, I find our old house much the same-looking, but in a changed world. Neat bungalows where the chapel and school hut stood, and cornfields stretched to the pond where me and my bro caught sticklebacks between lily pads and iris. A clear view over the Pennines too, instead of those factory chimneys puffing plumes of every mucky shade...

Aye, our old house much the same-looking, but Dad’s shed gone.

Was my message in the bottle ever found and read? My old secrets gloated over? There was a bookie’s daughter. Doe-eyed, softly spoken. A time in the tent, Dad’s well-oiled lawn mower pushing closer every moment...

nettles beer
our lad-o’-rhyme returns a lassie’s wink

Paul Beech
old demons
bending me over - familiar blues

n.k.
we all have
our moody moments ...
just a bleak day

n.k.

Natalia Kuznetsova country churchyard -
the dead poisoned
by herbicide

Antonio Mangiameli
anniversary
only the cake is sweet

morning sounds
the ones you took with you when you left

friendship
some seedlings don't mature

screaming toddler getting the looks
I used to give other moms

Claudette Russell shaped by time the mountain and I as always I’m fine until it’s time to see the doctor

chasing rainbows...
as long as the light lasts you’ll have my heart

Mike Keville
Law Day race this year with ambulance as pace car fast times expected

Bart Greene
class reunion
the day she lent me her eraser

snowslide buried family secrets the morning after she absentmindedly makes two cups of coffee

sunny morning
the waitress
holds the glasses up to the light to see if they are clean

Olivier Schopfer
A Trashbag of Presents

snow dust on the mountain – casting notice
for the holiday play

from year to year
the same complaints

pine scented candles
just enough money to carry them through

frost moon
a trashbag of presents
left on the porch

suet cakes for the birds in the shape of stars holiday baking

one batch
without nuts

Angela Terry
Julie Warther
inside
trying to escape the rain
inside

low sodium diet
a taste of salt to the wind

David J Kelly
six pack posture
the photographer takes control of my breath

her free verse
on shopping . . .
my haiku on savings

Srinivasa Rao Sambangi
homecoming ...
cracks deeper
in the path

ritorno a casa ... più profonde le crepe / nel sentiero

Lucia Cardillo
convention over Superman begs
for a lift home

trimming my hedge
the retired barber chats away

batman costume
still not brave enough to go outside

winking at me as I get dressed for work cats at the window

biting wind
the snake charmer
kisses his cobra

John McManus
furrowed walk
finding the mall-parked car — ten thousand plots

fifty years
taking out the trash — so much stargazing

Suzanne Niedzielska
without showing up knocks on doors –
night wind

bussa alle porte senza dire chi è vento di marzo

lovers ...
the trembling hand
at the first selfie

nnamorati...
la mano tremolante
al primo selfie

Ezio Infantino
women’s football match the full-forward’s nail polish flashes red

a new folder
for his new life . . .
retirement party

double gourd
the need to re-embrace
my life
swirling leaf . . .
the deceptive manoeuvre of your dance steps crowd funding ...
a long haul to heal
the cracks in his life

Cynthia Rowe
River Thames
the rush and flow of tourists

toy telephone
a toddler takes a call from god

Lucy Whitehead
lost in sunset the lullaby of a bereaved mother numerology the odd patterns of my calculated risks weather forecast

my thoughts jump
from cloud to cloud

desi roti —
the invisible fingerprints of my grandmother

Hifsa Ashraf
inside a crack
a flower without a name-war time

pieces of life between yellowed pages-old attic

origami fold-
a crane comes to life inside your hands

Angela Giordano
waiting room
checking the colours of shoe laces

simple presents
the lost innocence
of our youth

Mike Gallagher
puffed out scrubbing my non-stick pan

Barbara A. Taylor
a child again
surrounded by trees
learning pigeon language

Maureen Weldon
Idle Worship

When I was a lad of thirteen I came over all religious.

Just as I had seen Mom and Dad do I put up pictures of gods and goddesses on the walls of my room. I garlanded them with strings of marigold, burned incense sticks and knelt down every night to pray to them. And everything was hunky dory until one morning Sis invaded the sanctity of my room in her search for a missing hairclip.

I had just waved a lighted oil lamp before the gods and was deep in prayer when my sister’s high pitched voice asked me what the hell I was up to. I almost jumped out of my epidermis and looked at her reproachfully. She brushed aside the reproachful look much as one would an errant hair that tickles the nose.

“What are these posters doing here?” asked Sis. “Are you crazy?”

“Atheists like you will never understand the religious mind,” I told her rather pompously.

“Religious forsooth!” she said. “What’s so religious about pictures of Clint Eastwood, Marlon Brando, Audrey Hepburn and...” she paused to identify the fourth. “And Shirley MacClaine?”

“Pooh!” I chided. “What would an agnostic know about gods! They have to be seen to be believed. Have you seen Clint Eastwood in Dirty Harry, Audrey Hepburn in Roman Holiday?” I asked bitterly.

Sis rolled her eyes heavenward. Then set upon the task of systematically ripping off the posters from the walls. I wept copiously of course. I even contemplated wailing and beating my breast. But religion does not die so easily.

Now, decades later, I have real gods and goddesses mounted on my walls: Ussain Bolt, Rafael Nadal and Serena Williams.

Confessional —
the priest wears a cassock and a smirk

Gautam Nadkarni
A Slice of the Sky

I was gazing at you, a few days ago. I don’t know if you noticed, but yes I was. I don’t think you wouldn’t have noticed because your big eyes see everything — the scarlet blur of a murder, the deep wounds on a beggar’s face and the cut that slashes his cheek, the hollow loneliness in a drunkard’s eyes.

The air was fresh and carried the fragrance of ripe strawberries.

I was gazing at you, one moment. And in the other, the breeze took you away... the cruel, nefarious breeze.

returning home ...
the staircase rattling
with excitement

Ishaan Singh
teardrops...
wish we could count
the pain

wounded sparrow - she opens
the window wider

Munia Khan
a friend tells me how to live my life
his way

Un amigo
Diciéndome como vivir mi vida Como la suya

Wilbert Salgado
sirens in the tunnel . . .
I hide
for no particular reason

Richard Grahn
in the bar
together in silence
sticky rings

WhatsApp
another way my children can ignore me

Bisshie
poetrypea.com
tattooed girl tells me her body is a museum usually no charge

her kiss the transfusion I was dying for

Rp Verlaine
his new fence
making our neighborhood great again

Grandad’s workshop
everything in its place but him

after it’s over
air returns to the room poetry reading

Bob Moyer
in the treetops
the caw of a crow ...
mother’s voice

plein air
with a fine brush
he stipplesthe wind

Kathryn Stevens
a biblical fart
grandpa in his own pew Sunday morning

dinner date –
my fish, his fish eyeing each other

late night date –
sand in my bra
all day long

opera diva –
her parrot prone to sudden outbursts of song
meeting again
in some other land through another door

carol raisfeld
photo & words

Carol Raisfeld
computer crash
the healing power of a cloud

Kath Abela Wilson
at fifty
lying in a field of grass the sky six years old again no sound in his bowl how quickly the blind beggar pockets the bill

second-hand bookstore in the two-dollar bin how to write haiku

home from the hospice folding the freshly-washed sheets as she used to do

Mark Miller
selfie at the temple-
the gargoyles
roll their eyes at me

foreign tongue-
I never fail to understand a compliment

February end-
the surge in heat and vegetable prices

Vidya S Venkatramani
at his side in the casket
his CPAP machine

Jim Krotzman
empty theatre
the tallest guy sits right in front of me

nude beach I’m the only one in a swimsuit

Nicholas Mathisen
Earth Day
finally we share one thing in common

Agus Maulana Sunjaya
landscaping
I uproot bitter roots of malice

introduction...
we put on a performance of new selves

beauty clinic all the remedies to problems I never had

Good Friday
Jesus asks for more beer backstage

Theresa Okafor
crooning Sinatra alone in the back porch neighbour’s silhouette stored in my heart...

I leave her funeral pamphlet in the recycling bin veterinary clinic

checking the dog’s teeth the vet bares hers too

washing his grief
in alcohol ... the struggle for words peeling potatoes disjointed thoughts

come and go

Madhuri Pillai
first date
even my breath is perfumed

Ayeyemi, Taofeek Aswagaawy
family reunion
I add hot spices to the mulled wine

foreign map
the taxi driver’s prominent veins

heatwave
the uber driver says
my street is cool

Easter egg
I gaze into a vacuum

Martha Magenta
https://marthamagenta.com/saffron milk
her tested way to please him

Richa Sharma
Newlywed — climbing 35 floors
to see the stars

Christiane Ranieri
Link: christiane-ranieri.fr stayin' alive
the groom's parents revive their disco moves

Bruce H. Feingold
corks pop
a happy marriage no piece of cake

racing through the intersection the white-knuckled driving instructor describes a stop sign

some folks drown
their sorrows . . .
me, my enemy

zebra crossing
we move as one
on the way to the zoo

Robert Witmer
the removal men laughing
at our wobbly bed

hotel elevator
no eye contact unwritten rules

my son
now opening jam jars
for me

Roger Watson
the same goal
for ages 5 and 80:
not wetting one’s pants

senior club
he looks more dignified with his new cane

still confused about Medicare vs. Medicaid at sixty-four

John J. Han
dentist’s office
diplomas lined up in perfect rows

settling on a single candle father’s birthday

silent protest
the only noise from the sidelines feeling restless I delete a comma end of the week

an expired coupon
in my work bag

Debbi Antebi
bathing the dead his daughters hold his hands at arm's length

all night trains
behind the funeral home dark little breezes

William Keckler
happy hour
two old women talking tattoos

spring night
the twirl of her skirt on the bar stool

evening poems
the cat and i play with the same pen

cafe buddha
i, too, have a cup full of emptiness

Ben Moeller-Gaa
leaning out the window
an old woman new with spring... children at hopscotch

a smoky-peach sunset mother must be painting

Jo Balistreri
living alone
with her things about her alone things

the heartache
beneath “oh it’s nothing” palimpsest

Jackie Maugh Robinson
miss of the day . . .
gambled away in an instant annual salary

Ivan Gaćina
a month's rain in half an hour
market crash

suicide note spellchecked
folded neatly in half

bluebells smudged
on purpose
the artist uses a pseudonym

Mark Gilbert
twilight blues - the here and now is here and now

robyn brooks
his ragged cap
hangs from a branch
homeless

Darrell Petska
meditation
dodging the potholes of my mind

forcing forsythia branches—she remembered what she wanted to say

his stories
filling in the gaps
with suspicions

Sondra J. Byrnes
@SondraJByrnes
Facebook
sign language...
the dog drops a shoe
by my feet

moonflower...
writing to catch the bus of acceptance

Claire Vogel Camargo
Kala Ramesh
Guest ‘Failed’ Editor
editor@failedhaiku.com

(all work copyrighted by the authors)